

You're sitting down to dinner with your family and every ten minutes, someone else is calling you with "crap" they want to sell you. If I wanted it in the first place, I would have found it myself. Just because the State of New Jersey has stricter rules on the Do Not Call program than the federal government doesn't make NJ's rules unfair. Maybe, we should tighten up the rules on the federal side to match NJ's. Or, are the interests of the telemarketers more important than those of us who receive the calls? Why are their rights to bother me more important than my rights NOT to be bothered? Maybe we New Jerseyans should call the members of the FCC at all hours of the day and night to harass them just like the telemarketers do us. Just think, if you live in NJ you are protected from these harassing calls, too. Do you want them reduced to satisfy some interest group?
